Thirty six years (thirty in school) and still I'm just another girl walking past his room.

"Nurse!" An honest mistake, I tell myself. "I'm your doctor, sir; how can I help?"

This patient isn't from a different time. He's young, like me. Doesn't he see my white coat, my badge (MD)?

Tell me, I want to know: Last time normal? What happened? I examine him from head to toe.

"Honey" that, and "Sweetie" this. Would he call his male doctor buddy or dude? Inside, I'm screaming I want to spit.

I'm told it gets better with a little gray hair. Not. Fair.

Perhaps his new brain injury made him this way; I wonder what he would he have said yesterday. I suppose it's a good sign he's speaking at all.

My trainees come in. They present to me the attending physician, I oversee; I command their attention.

And still, before I leave the room, "Please tell the doctor I'd like to see him." Correspondence
