A 77-year-old woman who was diagnosed with Parkinson disease at 51 years of age presented with a 4-year history of intermittent jaw tremor. This was present at rest and declined in amplitude during voluntary movements. Tremor reappeared after the patient bit a tongue depressor continuously for 10 seconds (video on the Neurology[®] Web site at Neurology.org). “Re-emergent tremor” is a postural hand tremor that appears after some delay while maintaining a posture and is similar to the classic resting tremor of Parkinson disease.¹ Re-emergent jaw tremor may represent an additional type of tremor characteristic of Parkinson disease.

AUTHOR CONTRIBUTIONS

T.H. drafted and revised the manuscript, developed the study concept and design, analyzed, interpreted, and helped in data acquisition, and takes responsibility for the conduct of the research and final approval. N.K. participated in the data collection. M.K. participated in the data collection. N.H. revised the manuscript for content.

STUDY FUNDING

Supported by Strategic Research Foundation Grant-in-Aid Project for Private Universities, Grants-in-Aid for Scientific Research (KAKENHI) (to T.H., 60338390), from the Japanese Ministry of Education, Culture, Sports, Science and Technology.
